The album debuted at number three on the US Billboard 200 chart, selling 189,000 copies in its first week and staying in the Top 40 for 18 weeks. The album featured three singles: "Give It to Me", "Brand New Me", and "I Don't Want to Be in Love". K-Ci & JoJo released their second studio album, Return of the Real on October 20, 2004. This album featured the hit single "I Love It" with Marques Houston. The album debuted at number three on the US Billboard 200 chart, selling 125,000 copies in its first week and staying in the Top 40 for 10 weeks. Return of the Real includes the hit single "Humpin' & Pimpin'", which became the duo's fourth number-one hit on the US Billboard Hot 100, the first of five number-one hits for the album. This double disc K-Ci & JoJo album has 14 brand new tracks! Although the first disc contains some of their most popular hit singles, the second disc includes some of their R&B remixes, medleys, and instrumentals from their most popular albums! The album will surely make an impact in your next mix!

Q: Do we really need Stack Overflow? I don't mean on-topic-ness (which is surely necessary), but the Stack Overflow website itself. I keep hearing that SO is a great place to get answers to coding questions. My view is that it's just a place where people with programming questions go to, as opposed to a place where programmers go to. So... how much traffic do SO sites get? Are they as busy as I think? What does the traffic look like? It's all good and fine that Stack Overflow exists and is helpful to people. But we could go about it in a different way, and I'm wondering if that would be worthwhile. (This question is not a rant against Stack Overflow. I think it's great and I use it myself.)

A: This question has a lot of answers already, but I thought I'd add a few more thoughts. When I googled "how many people do you need to have using your service to be profitable?" I found lots of answers, but I found one much more informative than the others. The answer is about a hundred thousand users, but that number applies to 82157476af
